

Colic in the Breastfed Baby

Written by Jack Newman, MD, FRCPC

Monday, 01 June 2009 00:00 - Last Updated Monday, 09 December 2013 09:02

Colic is one of the mysteries of nature. Nobody knows what it really is, but everyone has an opinion. In a typical colic situation, the baby starts to have crying periods about two to three weeks after birth. These occur mainly in the evening, and finally stop when the baby is about three months of age (occasionally older). When crying, the baby is often inconsolable, though

