Now public health and medical trade groups are pressuring legislators to pass laws that would not only eliminate nonmedical religious and conscientious belief vaccine exemptions for children to attend school, but also would require children to get every one of the 69 doses of 16 federally recommended vaccines unless a parent can get a medical vaccine exemption from a doctor. This vaccine dragnet, which is already being applied to healthcare workers, is also pulling in childcare workers and teachers as proposed new vaccine laws threaten them with loss of employment if they cannot find a doctor to write a medical vaccine exemption.

Zealously pursuing a 99.99 percent vaccination rate and using very small groups of immune
