All the way home I kept looking at him in the mirror, and trying to talk to him. Complete silence. I went to get his haircut on the way home, which he never had the patience for. As I held him down while the girl cut his hair, she stopped for a minute and asked "Is he autistic?" I started sobbing. How could this lady pick up on it in five minutes, and I lived with the kid! After breaking down and telling her about my day, I had to get back home to my husband, Jonathan, and my other set of twins. I forgot to mention that, huh? In the midst of all this we had another set of twins, Christopher and Joshlyn.

That April day flew by as I called everyone and cried my ears off. I knew he was the same little boy he was yesterday, but now his unusual behavior had a name: autism.

The summer flew past. We started chiropractic care with Dr. Nicole Poirie and speech therapy.

Washington DC on June 4. I looked at my husband and said I m going with Dominick. With this information and a new found passion, we drove to Washington DC and marched in a rally with 8,500 families, Jenny, Jim Carrey, Robert Kennedy, and Dr. Jay Gordon, just to name a few. We screamed in front of the CDC, Shame on you! Julie Gerberding of course declined to
